GRAMMAR

The expression "Hajimemashite." is derived from the verb hajimeru - to begin. Literally translated, the expression means "for the first time." As the phrase is used when you meet someone for the first time, however, an accurate English interpretation is "How do you do?" or "Nice to meet you./Good to meet you." This phrase is often the first thing said when introducing oneself, and appropriate for all politeness levels.

Watashi is the Japanese pronoun for both I/me. In Japanese, the same pronoun is used for both the subjective (I) and objective (me) case, and therefore, the intended pronoun is determined from sentence context. In today's dialog watashi, the subject, is marked by the topic particle wa.

Yoroshii is the polite form of the adjective yoi - good, nice. In today's dialog, yoroshii is in adverbial form - yoroshiku. The expression that follows, onegai shimasu, is based on the verb negau - to wish. The expression is interpreted to mean please, and can be used as a stand alone expression when the speaker asks for something or for someone to do something. The expression yoroshiku onegai shimasu, can take on many different meanings depending on usage context. In today's conversation, it is used in the context of meeting someone for the first time, and therefore, interpreted as "Please be kind to me." as this nuance is conveyed when using this expression in this context.

Today's lesson introduced the standard way of introducing oneself in Japanese*. When using this pattern of self introduction, the name is the only part that will differ; everything else will remain the same.

初めまして。私は_____です。宜しくお願いします。
Hajimemashite. Watashi wa _____ desu. Yoroshiku onegai shimasu.

*There are other, more polite, ways of introducing oneself in Japanese. They will be covered in later lessons.
